

Minto

Minto was established in 1898, when the Canadian Northern Railway created a branch from Hilton, through to Hartney. The town soon had all the shops that a community needed to thrive, from a butcher shop to a Chinese laundry.

In 1906 a second rail line from North Dakota to Brandon made Minto and even busier place.

As time passed, some of the businesses that had been very important in the early days were no longer needed. People could take their cars to nearby larger towns to shop.

So while Minto remains a vital community it's main street evolved to fit the times.

Minto

Minto was established in 1898, when the Canadian Northern Railway created a branch from Hilton, through to Hartney. The town soon had all the shops that a community needed to thrive, from a butcher shop to a Chinese laundry.

In 1906 a second rail line from North Dakota to Brandon made Minto and even busier place.

As time passed, some of the businesses that had been very important in the early days were no longer needed. People could take their cars to nearby larger towns to shop.

So while Minto remains a vital community it's main street evolved to fit the times.

Minto

Minto was established in 1898, when the Canadian Northern Railway created a branch from Hilton, through to Hartney. The town soon had all the shops that a community needed to thrive, from a butcher shop to a Chinese laundry.

In 1906 a second rail line from North Dakota to Brandon made Minto and even busier place.

As time passed, some of the businesses that had been very important in the early days were no longer needed. People could take their cars to nearby larger towns to shop.

So while Minto remains a vital community it's main street evolved to fit the times.

Minto

Minto was established in 1898, when the Canadian Northern Railway created a branch from Hilton, through to Hartney. The town soon had all the shops that a community needed to thrive, from a butcher shop to a Chinese laundry.

In 1906 a second rail line from North Dakota to Brandon made Minto and even busier place.

As time passed, some of the businesses that had been very important in the early days were no longer needed. People could take their cars to nearby larger towns to shop.

So while Minto remains a vital community it's main street evolved to fit the times.